WEEKLY FISH MARKET.

Trade continues to show a falling off, the decrease of orders last week being very marked. Some of the salt bankers arrived from their second trips the past week with but very small fares, thus confirming what has been stated so often of late in these columns, namely, that the fall catch of salt bank cod would be exceptionally light. These fares have been selling to the shippers at prices not equalled since the fall of 1891. Many of the big dealers attribute the falling off of the trade to the high prices; it is therefore necessary to ask of the trade for their lines of codfish and some of them feel that this season of high prices will so effect the trade that they will have, even in view of the small bank fares which they know are coming, almost enough codfish to carry them along until spring.

The first arrivals of the season from Bay of Islands with salt herring came this week, two vessels getting home with full fares. The price is high and the fares were divided up between the smokers and the smoked bloater trader is on with a rush.

Prices on fish ex-vessel remain practically unchanged, the market being very firm.
